CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

GRADUATE STUDIES PROGRAM

The Graduate Studies Program began in 1966 with initial focus on Chinese area and language studies. Gradually, it has expanded to include other geographical areas and academic disciplines such as economics, engineering, geography, law, and psychology. The majority of those selected for this program have completed one or more years of graduate study; they must be committed to attend graduate school the fall following completion of the internship.

The Graduate Studies Program has proven mutually beneficial. Working with professional analysts on foreign intelligence, students have an opportunity to apply their academic skills to the substantive work of the Agency. The Agency benefits from the high quality of the student's research projects, some of which are published and distributed throughout the Intelligence Community. The students also have weekly orientation sessions with senior officials who discuss in detail the work of various components of the Agency. These officials are candid in describing the activities and responsibilities of their components. This same frankness prevails in their response to questions from the students.

Favorable reaction to the assignments and briefings has been consistently high. Consequently, competition for acceptance into the program is very keen. The number of inquiries received each year has far exceeded the number of positions available.

The Agency is an equal opportunity employer.
